According to Nielsen and Time Warner’s own estimates, “Game of Thrones” is being seen by 35 million viewers per week. That’s over 100 million viewers for the whole series. It’s the most viewed television show ever, especially compared to the Disney Channel’s “Girl Meets World” which had 14.5 million viewers last year. Last year, the show was number one and this year they are number one again. It’s the first time a major show has come back from the end of a season and have viewers come back for more. The question is, will they win? Some are saying that the ending has sealed the deal and that the show is already finished. Others are saying that it has just cemented their status as the most popular show on TV. Because of the death of two of the major characters, “Game of Thrones” has not received as much criticism as other shows have (“The Vampire Diaries,” for instance). The death of major characters is a huge part of television and doesn’t seem to be any less common in this world of recast characters. So it’s possible that the show will be on the road to ratings decline that will force it off the top 10. As for the storylines, many are naming the feud between two fan-favorite brothers, Tyrion and Jaime Lannister as being the most compelling drama of the season. Likewise, the wedding
