Q: How to search a tree for a specific leaf? Say we have a tree structure (or graph) with edges and a collection of nodes (with a binary tree representing the edges). Each node in the tree is marked either true or false. I would like to find the closest node to a given point in the tree that is marked true. Note that the tree can be cyclic (meaning that each node can have a parent).

EDIT: I now have a solution for the general case, and I thought I should maybe mention it here (or maybe somewhere else), but as my solution is essentially the same as the accepted answer I'll leave it here for posterity.

A: The closest node to your point will be the node you find using the Breadth-first search algorithm. One algorithm for finding the closest node is the Floyd-Warshall algorithm. The Floyd-Warshall algorithm takes an undirected weighted graph, and finds a shortest path from every node to every other node. Then, you can use the most direct distance between two nodes, and add that to the shortest path distance. Here is an example in pseudo-code of the algorithm.

Dijkstra(G)
initialize Dist[i] to infinity for all i initialize Visited[i] to false for all i start from any point (or node in your graph) while there are nodes in G
