A case report and review of the literature. Hodgkin's lymphoma (HL) is extremely rare in the era of highly active antiretroviral therapy, and is especially infrequent among patients with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). We describe an unusual case of cervical HL in a man who did not have HIV. The patient presented with painful gingival swelling, and a cervical node biopsy revealed atypical Reed-Sternberg cells, which showed the immunophenotype of a classical HL. He was treated with radiotherapy and chemotherapy and had a complete response. This case report highlights the rarity of this disease in an HIV patient, and also it provides data for the usefulness of chemotherapy in the treatment of HL in an HIV-positive patient. One known arrangement for the delivery and/or removal of coking fuel oil is to provide a train of interconnected bulk storage tanks wherein liquid fuel is pumped through a conduit system to propel fuel through the train of tanks. In such systems, each tank is provided with a plurality of spray galleries. Steam is introduced into the spray galleries for atomizing the fuel prior to discharging into the tank from a nozzle at the end of the gallery. A problem with such known arrangements is that fuel frequently builds up and cakes on the discharge nozzle. This problem is particularly acute in the case of fast throughput systems and particularly at temperatures of 650.degree. F. and above. Q: Naming convention for "model-like" objects I want to be sure, that it's the right question to ask. A long time ago, I've built an ASP.NET-MVC application with a model. I wanted to implement some model-like objects, in my model. For instance, I had some "description" as a string: public string Description { get; set; } Now I read, that the more common naming conventions are the opposite. That means, I should name my description-objects as "Description". It also makes sense to me,

One and Star Wars #119-120 recap Wrapping up our weekend of Star Wars fun, we start this week with Rogue One: A Star Wars Story. I had a half-awake weekend for this one, so I wasn't able to get a lot of words in under the multiple trailers. But I've got plenty to say about it. First, let me talk about something that keeps tricking me, and whether or not my instincts have me on the mark, and it has nothing to do with Rogue One. Apparently, no matter how many trailers there are, there is a lot of talk about Rogue One. A lot of "you have to see this movie" and "there is nothing else on." I have watched maybe three trailers, and yet people are gushing. But not me. I'm not a big fan of the trailers, and I'm suspicious about how quickly they changed them up on me with the different posters for the film. That bothers me. That doesn't bother them. So I'm fine. Maybe they are correct, and I'm just not buying it. But the number of times that trailers have no other source material to base them on and say “it’s awesome.”, alarms me that if I actually watch Rogue One, I’d feel that way. Now, about Rogue One. I didn’t really like it that much, because the trailers were enough to give an idea for what the film was, but that didn’t stop me from appreciating the film’s attempt at a different spin on what a Star Wars film should be and look like. I also wasn’t pleased that we had a “die hard” version of a Star Wars film, with a “go to any means necessary to get what you want.” kind of film. I don’t think that you can really judge an SW film by how much it does that, even if that is the conventional game plan. I’m not sure how I feel about that version of Star Wars, although, it may be that I realize how much I have enjoyed the recent films (especially for the planned “origin” stories and original characters that I’ve discovered), and I realize that those films are flavored by what Lucas did when he created these characters back in

About Me I am a Software Engineer working in the Netherlands but living in the UK. We all know that the UK is one of the most exciting countries to live in with culture, fun, and a great employment rate. I would like to share my experiences and knowledge in the VR industry. I am creating an innovative game development company called LastnOni Studios where I would like to harness my skills. I am currently able to produce content for VR and we are working on creating some original content in the coming months. Right now I would like to showcase my work to the VR Community and recruit as many people as I can through social media. I would love to hear your feedback on all my news and work so
