Tested on Windows 7 64-Bit; Operating System: WindowsÂ .Why do women report poor mental health for a longer period than men after cancer? A comparison of self-reported health and mental health in two large Swedish population-based studies. To compare the time period after cancer during which women and men reported poorer mental health and whether gender differences were explained by self-reported health. We studied 50,587 individuals in the Swedish National Patient Register (N = 48,329 women and N = 2,248 men) and linked them to the Longitudinal Integration Database for Health Insurance and Labour Market Studies (N = 41,228 women and N = 1,824 men). We estimated prevalence of poorer mental health based on self-reported health, and the period of time during which respondents reported poorer mental health compared to not reporting poorer mental health. We used Cox regression to study whether gender was associated with poorer mental health, compared to men, and if self-reported health explained any gender differences. Having a cancer diagnosis was associated with an increased risk for poorer mental health for both men and women during the first 6 months after cancer (multivariable-adjusted hazard ratio (HR) = 1.48, 95% confidence interval (CI) = 1.34-1.64 and HR = 1.33, 95% CI = 1.15-1.53 respectively). However, for women, but not for men, poorer self-reported health was associated with an increased risk for poorer mental health after 6 months of follow-up (multivariable-adjusted HR = 1.23, 95% CI = 1.13-1.34). The results suggest that self-reported health needs to be considered when studying long-term mental health after cancer. After cancer, women reported poorer mental health for a longer period than men. Poor self-reported health had a stronger association with poorer mental health for women than men. The mechanisms behind the association between self-reported health and poorer mental health are not completely understood. You are currently viewing the old forums.
