Gunslinger Interactive's debut arcade shooter is a little rough around the edges and has several failings, but the combination of quick-paced FM synth soundtrack, bullet-ridden scenery, and big boss battles make it a gem. The game can be very difficult at times and may be one of the most frustrating shooters I've played to date. But the appeal is in the design of the gameplay and the story they're trying to tell, something that lies in its execution. Pros: This game offers a heaping helping of game play that is unique to the shooter genre. The combination of dodge-able ninja-like enemies and bullets that send monsters flying and/or launch nearby enemies away is a classic arcade shooter element that the genre hasn't seen much of lately. The enemy encounters are varied and can get somewhat repetitive. The game offers multiple levels that can be completed in two different ways (freeplay and story mode). The latter offers six of its own unique levels with an ending. The game puts a heavy focus on boss battles that are easily accessible and fair. The limited health pickups offer a bit of a challenge as you aim for the most destructive method of killing the enemies. Most bosses can be defeated in a single combo. The game feels like a toned down game of Killer Instinct. Gunslinger features many of the elements that made this genre

In the last year of my marriage I lost some of my self-confidence, not because of any husbandly cause, but because of my growing work-load. Then a thought popped into my head: If my husband can survive in this steel jungle without help, I can learn to be more self-sufficient in a world of city living. And that is the beginning of my discovery of "The Zombie Maker: A Self-Sufficient Woman's Guide to Surviving the City." Self-sufficiency isn't just an attitude. It isn't just sticking to your guns. It isn't even "Cheer up. Be yourself." It means establishing a comfortable living modle that enables you to survive in your new working world without the need for the husband. How self-sufficient do you want to be? Tough enough to pack your own bag? Have your own car? Car pool? How tough? On the next page you'll see the Zombie Maker in a bite-size test. Not "I can do that." But "Wow! That's a lot tougher than I realized." Or maybe you've already been on a self-sufficient vacation! Take the "Zombie Maker Test" 1. How long can you go without social contacts? You can't get along forever on only your spouse's support. Personally I'll never be ready for that. But you can survive for extended periods of time without having a large circle of friends or even family. For twenty years I've managed. 2. How hard would it be to leave your current living arrangements? In a prior life I was uprooted from my family, schools, home town, and family traditions. I was likewise forced to get an education, learn a new language and culture, and establish a comfortable base in order to secure decent employment. After twenty years living on my own, I have no desire to return to those rugged conditions of homelessness. 3. Can you change sleeping arrangements? Even when I'm living away from home, I do the best I can not to demand too much from the men I live with. (We live no husbands as pets.) And when my sleeping boyfriends have to find lodging elsewhere, I hate the idea of them going to a low-grade hotel, rather than my standards. Why should you care if you can cook, bathe in your own bathroom sink, and make
