We recently showed that a chronic stressor, icv administration of the beta-adrenergic agonist isoproterenol, produces tolerance to its hypothermic effects in the feline. We found that these tolerant cats respond to higher doses of isoproterenol even when they are given in combination with pharmacological agents known to block the development of tolerance to the same stimulus. As an initial step in exploring this phenomenon, we examined whether neuropeptides which may be involved in the development of tolerance in the feline could be blocked by treatment with the antagonist. The following conditions were examined: i) chronic pretreatment with a beta-adrenergic antagonist; ii) pretreatment with a GABAergic antagonist; iii) pretreatment with a 5HT1A antagonist; iv) pretreatment with agents known to block the development of tolerance to noxious stimuli. We found that all three of these conditions prevented the development of isoproterenol tolerance. We now plan to test the hypothesis that these agents block the development of tolerance by blocking specific chemoreceptors. If the treatments are successful, this will provide evidence that these receptors play a central role in the development of tolerance.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a liquid crystal display device, and more particularly to a liquid crystal display device in which a light shielding film is provided on a color filter substrate. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, as a liquid crystal display device, one that is provided with a color filter substrate having, for example, a structure shown in FIG. 19 is known. FIG. 19 is a schematic cross sectional view of a color filter substrate. On a transparent glass substrate 101, a resin layer 102 is formed with stripe-shaped openings 104 that reach a transparent electrode 103, and is coated with a black matrix 105
